BIRD PHOTOGRAPHY AND THE LAW

The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds is the charity that takes action for wild birds and the environment. With other wild bird and habitat organisations worldwide it forms a global partnership called BirdLife International.

Photography of wild birds in Britain is limited by law where it involves the disturbance of rare breeding species, as explained in paragraph 9 below. Other legal and moral restrictions, such as those affecting access to nesting colonies, or feeding and roosting sites, may also be relevant to photographers seeking close views.

The birds’ welfare must always come first—photography should not disturb their normal activity. At times this will mean not taking photographs.

Some extra considerations apply to photography at the nest:

1. Ensure you have the landowner's permission.
2. Keep the nest site secret. Choose a site away from public view, and if a hide is used, camouflage it well. Leave no tracks or signs that may lead predators to the brood.
3. Keep visits to the nest as few and as short as possible. Changes of photographer should be kept to a minimum and should not take place in bad weather.
4. Leave the nest as you find it. Any ‘gardening’ of a nest should be kept to a minimum to avoid exposing the nest to predators or adverse weather. Tie back vegetation rather than cutting it so it can be restored to its original position.
5. When using a hide, erect it some way off, moving it closer over a period of days so the birds grow used to it. Ensure at each stage that the hide has been accepted. If there is any doubt, move it back. Many species will need at least a week's preparation.
6. The use of a friend is recommended as a ‘walk-away’, accompanying the photographer to and from the hide. Certain species may require two people for this purpose. This is often the only responsible method to minimise disturbance.
7. Fingers and lenses suddenly poked out of a hide, flapping cloth and loud noises scare birds. Get them used to small sounds, talk to them perhaps, before taking pictures.
8. Remember that public opinion generalises actions, and that the thoughtlessness of one bird photographer may damage the reputation of others.
9. To protect rare breeding birds, the law prohibits intentional disturbance of any species included in Schedule 1 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. This applies while such a bird is building a nest, or is in, on or near a nest containing eggs or young. It is also illegal to intentionally disturb dependent young of Schedule 1 birds.

Photographers cannot visit such nests unless they obtain the appropriate licence from the relevant authority. These are as follows:
